what is my work about

I am deeply interested in the universal – love, innocence, joy, beauty... all things that are the essence of humanity, of nature or of existence itself. However, in the pursuit of this universal essence I realized that one needs to first get an insight into the personal – the self. And this has since been my purpose – to follow the inquiry down to the question ‘who am I’?

This purpose has brought forth more questions, and these work like signposts for me. There are two broad spaces I have been exploring. What is balance – why do we seek it & how do we experience it. And, what does being boundless mean - physically, in material, in ideas, in time. Rather than actively looking for answers, I stay with these questions - and have found the subtle realizations seem to flow in.

This then becomes my work - an outcome of reflecting on these questions. Like the answers, the work is abstract - as it best precipitates my experiences. The process, tools & materials change based on the question being lived, but most often I would be using an ordinary kitchen tool – the rolling pin. I primarily work with oils and the work grows onto the canvas over many weeks.

My attempt through my work is to be honest to my own process and journey. I hope that provides the viewers a window to glimpse and connect with something more universal what is balance?

good or evil
chaos & order
form or function atomic & astronomical spontaneity or composition universality & self-expression harmony or tension.

seeking balance
living on the edge

when we accept the opposites, we start seeing the whole & then experience the sublime, transient nature of it

ein moment | a moment
in zeitlos | in timeless how do we transcend time?

this moment
this fleeting thing we call Now it's a sharp edge on one side there is all that has gone by,
on the other everything that's yet to come,

it is in touch with both the past and the future

deep in it
you feel suspended
part of everything you feel timeless

savor this... this moment in timeless
